Training description

Many countries have begun to develop smart villages/towns/cities with varying degrees of success. This course focuses on the design and implementation of smart sustainable cities (SSCs), and would be useful for policy makers, urban planners, and anyone interested in understanding basic aspects of smart city development.

The course provides an overview of aspects of smart cities to be considered when aiming to achieve this development. It focuses on the perspectives of the human element and the built environment. Although reference is made to more technical topics (such as sensors and radiofrequency propagation), those are the focus of a more advanced-level course.
